

SAMUEL MÄKINEN

You are a famous private detective, having made a name for yourself through newspaper columns about murder cases with supernatural elements that you have solved in various parts of Sweden. You move comfortably in Stockholm's high society and enjoy being invited to speak about your cases to distinguished audiences.

You have come to the National Archives to investigate an unsolved death at the Public Orphanage of Stockholm seventeen years ago. The matron, Elin Andersson, was found dead on the premises. The official cause of death was a stroke, but her wealthy niece suspects foul play. She reads your column and has now hired you to investigate the murder. Having lived beyond your means these past few years, you accepted the commission.

The niece suspects that a girl named Fanny Silverström was responsible for her aunt's death. Fanny was a strange child, believed by others at the orphanage to possess supernatural abilities. You have recently uncovered that Fanny Silverström now goes by the name Una Ekblad and makes her living as a fortune-teller in White Hills. You have been tailing her for a while and have now followed her to the National Archives on Knights' Isle.
